Your physician has ordered an MRI/MRA examination for you. Based on your physician's assessment, MRI/MRA represents the best choice for evaluation of your medical condition as opposed to other diagnostic tools including: plain films, ultrasound, CT scan or other invasive examinations.

Like all tests, MRI/MRA has some very small associated risks for those patients with implanted devices or foreign bodies. The accurate completion of the screening sheet you have reviewed is essential to minimize the chance of any adverse effects.

On occasion, the need for a contrast agent is necessary based on your physician's assessment or the consulting radiologist's review. The contrast agent is extremely safe and offers the benefit of providing more accurate and complete diagnosis.

If you have questions regarding any aspect of this exam, including remote risks of serious reaction, benefits or alternatives, please speak to either the technologist, radiologist, or your personal physician.
